

Alessandra Mazzola

I graduated from the Palermo faculty of medicine, Italy, in 2006. Then, I obtained the Gastroenterology and Hepatology specialization in 2012 (Mentor Prof. A. Craxi, Palermo University) following by a PhD in 2016. I performed my internship at the Centre Hépatobiliaire, Paul Brousse Hospital, (Mentor Prof. D. Samuel) where I developed a particular interest in liver transplantation field. I was appointed to Transplant Unit chief resident at Sorbonne University, Pitié-Salpêtrière hospital, between 2014-2018. I obtained the European Board of Transplant Medicine (ESTM) diploma in 2015. I also obtained an Infections and Transplantation French Inter-University Diploma (IUD) from Sorbonne university, Paris France in 2019. Currently, my position is Transplant Unit senior physician at Pitié-Salpêtrière hospital, Paris.

My fields of interest are liver transplantation, especially infections before and after liver transplantation. I actively participate in international congresses performing oral and poster presentations (among others ILTS, EASL, ESOT, AASLD, AFEF, AISF) and has several publications in peer-reviewed journals.
